

Joint Committees on Justice; Finance and Public Credit; and Legislative Studies of the Senate of the Republic.

This document is presented based on the Agreement of the Political Coordination Board, which determines the holding of public hearings to analyze the draft decree that reforms and adds various provisions to the Amparo Law, Regulating Articles 103 and 107 of the Constitution, the Federal Tax Code, and the Organic Law of the Federal Court of Administrative Justice, hereinafter referred to as the initiative, referred to said Committees for their ruling. The undersigned respectfully request registration and are honored to share this letter with the Congress of the Union. This letter is submitted by the Mexican Bar Association, A.C., and the Rule of Law Lab at New York University School of Law.

It is presented with the intention of respectfully sharing international standards on access to justice and guarantees of effective judicial remedy for consideration in the discussion and deliberation of the initiative, with the aim of ensuring that these proposals are fully compatible with Mexico's international obligations

We maintain that restricting legitimate interest as the basis for standing contravenes the Mexican State's obligation to guarantee real access to an effective judicial remedy, especially in the face of diffuse or collective harm. We argue that an open and functional architecture of standing is a condition for the amparo to fulfill its function of constitutional control and protection of human rights. Likewise, we maintain that limiting the suspension of the contested act—in its origin, scope, or enforceability—distorts the effectiveness of the amparo by depriving it of precautionary protection capable of preventing irreparable harm and preserving the subject matter of the trial until a final decision is reached.

The Mexican Bar Association and the Rule of Law Lab (NYU Law) appear as organizations with a track record in defending the rule of law and in the technical analysis of judicial reforms. Our participation seeks to contribute to the legislative work with rigorous, neutral, and solution-oriented inputs, in line with the purpose of the public hearings to inform the ruling through a technical and pluralistic debate.

I. Facts

1. The amparo proceeding, as a means of constitutional control aimed at ensuring the protection and guarantee of human rights in Mexico, has been recognized both by legal doctrine and by various international institutions as an effective judicial remedy and a pillar of the protection of rights.
2. At the international level, the UN Human Rights Office in Mexico has emphasized—in welcoming decisions that confirm amparo remedies—the important role of the judiciary as guarantor of victims' rights.³ This recognition is in line with the standard of the Court

Inter-American Court of Human Rights, which requires that effective remedies not only exist in law, but also be suitable and capable of remedying the violation.⁴

3. Two of the elements that explain why amparo is a cornerstone refer, first, to its precautionary suspension capacity, which prevents irreparable damage and allows for "preserving the subject matter of the amparo."⁵ In this regard, the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation has characterized suspension as a precautionary measure that paralyzes the authority's actions while the trial lasts.⁶ The second element that explains the effectiveness of amparo is its accessibility through the concept of legitimate interest, which requires fewer requirements than legal interest and recognizes both individual and collective interest.⁷

4. On September 15, 2025, the Head of the Federal Executive, through the Ministry of the Interior, presented to the Board of Directors of the Senate the Initiative with a draft decree reforming and adding various provisions to the Amparo Law, Regulating Articles 103 and 107 of the Political Constitution of the United Mexican States, the Federal Tax Code, and the Organic Law of the Federal Court of Administrative Justice (hereinafter the initiative).⁸

5. The initiative contemplates various changes related to the amparo trial, including: i. limiting the admissibility and scope of the suspension of the contested act.

The call divides the topics to be discussed into two sessions. The first relates to

7. This call divides the topics to be discussed into two sessions. The first relates to the analysis of the modifications to the amparo trial, specifically legitimate interest and suspension, deadlines and consequences for non-compliance, and the digital amparo trial. The second relates to the expansion of the lawsuit, and compliance and enforcement of judgments and harmonization with the Federal Tax Code and the Organic Law of the Federal Court of Administrative Justice.

8. With the aim of contributing elements to the discussion of the first topic to be deliberated, specifically that related to modifications to legitimate interest and suspension the following is set forth.

II. International standards

9. In accordance with the provisions of Article 1 of the Constitution, all persons enjoy the recognized human rights and guarantees for their protection contained not only in the Constitution, but also in the international treaties to which the Mexican State is a party. Likewise, this article provides for the pro-persona principle, favoring at all times the broadest protection of the person.⁹ Finally, this provision imposes an obligation on all state authorities to promote, respect, protect, and guarantee human rights, under the principles of universality, interdependence, indivisibility, and progressiveness.¹⁰

⁹ Sala Primera de la Suprema Corte de Justicia de la Nación (México), Octubre 2012. Precedente vinculante, Tesis: 1a./J. 107/2012 (10a.) "Principio Pro-Persona. ¹⁰ Tribunal Colegiado de la Federación (México), Oct. 2014. Precedente no vinculante, Tesis XXVII.3o.2 CS (10a.), "Derechos humanos. Obligación de garantizarlos conforme al artículo 1o., párrafo tercero, de la Constitución Política

10. In this regard, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights has affirmed that the existence of a democratic government alone does not guarantee respect for human rights. According to the Inter-American Court, "the democratic legitimacy of certain acts or actions in a society is limited by international norms and obligations for the protection of human rights recognized in treaties such as the American Convention."¹¹ The Court has emphasized that "the protection of human rights constitutes an insurmountable limit to the rule of the majority, that is, to the sphere of what 'can be decided' by the majority in democratic instances, in which 'conventionality control' must also prevail."¹²
11. For these reasons, we request that these legislative authorities consider the following obligations when analyzing the initiative.

i. The obligation to guarantee access to an effective judicial remedy

12. The American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man, adopted by the Organization of American States in 1948, recognized that "Every person may have recourse to the courts to assert his rights. Likewise, he must have a simple and brief procedure by which justice protects him against acts of authority that violate, to his detriment, any of the fundamental rights enshrined in the Constitution."¹³
13. The Court has also affirmed that "the existence of an effective judicial remedy is an essential element in preventing situations of arbitrariness and ensuring the rule of law."¹⁴
14. At the universal level, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights establishes that "Everyone has the right to an effective remedy before the competent national tribunals, de los Estados Unidos Mexicanos". Tribunal Colegiado de la Federación (México), Oct. 2014. Precedente no vinculante, Tesis: XXVII.3o.4 CS (10a.), "Derechos humanos. that protects them against acts that violate their fundamental rights recognized by the constitution or by law."¹⁵

15. The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in Article 2.3, obliges States to guarantee that "(a) Any person whose rights or freedoms recognized in the present Covenant have been violated shall have an effective remedy, even if such violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity; ... (c) The competent authorities shall enforce any decision in which the remedy has been granted."

16. The American Convention on Human Rights reinforces this principle in Article 25.1, which establishes that "Everyone has the right to a simple and prompt remedy or to any other effective remedy before the competent tribunals for the protection of his rights against acts that violate his fundamental rights recognized by the Constitution, the law, or this Convention." ¹⁷ This provision also imposes a state obligation to guarantee the existence and effectiveness of such remedies and to enforce the corresponding decisions.¹⁸

17. According to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, "for such a remedy to exist, it is not enough that it be provided for by the Constitution or the law or that it be formally admissible, but it must also be truly capable of establishing whether a human rights violation has occurred and providing the necessary means to remedy it."¹⁹

18. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights has clarified that "the right to effective judicial protection provided for in Article 25 is not exhausted by free access to and the exercise of judicial remedies. It is necessary for the intervening body to produce a conclusion.

reasoned decision on the merits of the claim, establishing the admissibility or inadmissibility of the legal claim that gives rise to the judicial remedy."²⁰

ii. Standing to sue as an essential element of access to justice

19. The effectiveness of the right to judicial protection also requires that individuals have real standing to sue in order to activate the remedy. The Inter-American Court of Human Rights has specified that the meaning of Article 25 of the Convention is the "real possibility of accessing a judicial remedy capable of deciding whether there has been a violation and of restoring the right."²¹ And, in fulfilling their duty to establish effective remedies, States "must promote remedies accessible to all persons [...] every person who is entitled to that right must have the real possibility of invoking it."²²

20. For its part, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights has added that access to justice also requires adequate standing mechanisms to protect collective interests: "an essential component [...] is the possibility of having [...] actions representing public or collective interests."²³ In this context, the Commission emphasizes that "it is necessary for someone to be in a position to claim a remedy of a collective nature [...] Otherwise, the remedy cannot be considered effective."²⁴

iii. Precautionary measures as part of an effective judicial remedy

21. In the Inter-American Human Rights System, precautionary and provisional measures are essential components of the effectiveness of remedies, as they prevent irreparable damage and preserve the usefulness of the final judgment. The Inter-American Court has explained that these measures "are intended and designed to preserve the rights at risk [...] and ensure the integrity and effectiveness of the decision of fundamental."²⁵ Likewise, the Court itself has indicated that these precautionary measures "become a true jurisdictional guarantee of a preventive nature."²⁶ In the same vein, when analyzing the precautionary injunction in Venezuela, the Court emphasized that its nature "demands temporary, but immediate, protection" to restore the legal situation while the final judgment is being issued.²⁷ same vein, when analyzing the precautionary amparo in Venezuela, the Court emphasized that its nature "demands temporary but immediate protection" to restore the legal situation while the final judgment is being handed down.²⁷

22. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, for its part, has expressly recognized that "a particular dimension of the right to judicial protection consists of the right to access effective precautionary protection," and specifies that States must provide suitable and expeditious remedies for the immediate protection of rights.²⁸

III. Considerations

23. In accordance with the foregoing, a reform that restricts access to amparo proceedings through restrictions on legitimate interest or limitations on the suspension of the contested act would be incompatible with Mexico's international obligations to guarantee effective access to an effective judicial remedy.

24. The Mexican Amparo Law recognizes “legitimate interest” as the basis for standing to sue and, under its current regime, clearly distinguishes that interest from simple interest. Any reform that reverses this openness—for example, by eliminating or restricting the legitimate interest of affected individuals or groups—would contravene the obligation under Article 2 of the American Convention on Human Rights to maintain and improve domestic mechanisms that give effect to protected rights, rather than restricting them.³⁰

25. Limiting legitimate interest, especially in matters of diffuse or collective impact, unduly discriminates against persons who are currently entitled to access to that judicial remedy and, therefore, frustrates the “real possibility” required by Article 25 of the American Convention on Human Rights.

26. Limiting the suspension of the contested act distorts the effectiveness of the amparo, leaving the critical period before the judgment unprotected and rendering the amparo meaningless, in violation of Article 25 of the American Convention on Human Rights.

Based on the foregoing considerations, we respectfully request that the analysis and ruling on the initiative expressly assess the compatibility of each proposal—including those relating to suspensive effects and the notion of legitimate interest—with the aforementioned international standards and obligations, in particular those relating to the right to an effective judicial remedy and equal access to justice. specialized bodies be verified in order to ensure that the reforms do not contravene these parameters.
