CALISHA MYERS MEMORIAL CONVOCATION AWARD

In honor of Calisha . . .

Calisha Myers was a cherished member of the New York University School of Law family. A DC native, Calisha attended the city's public schools until enrolling at the prestigious Georgetown Day High School. She then went on to graduate from the University of Virginia in 2007 with a degree in Sociology and Media Studies. After college, her interests in media landed her an associate publisher role for an online news publisher. However, not soon after, Calisha began reconsidering her career goals and decided to become a Court Appointed Special Advocate with the CASA of DC, an organization that represents youth in family court.

To pursue her dream of working on behalf of others, Calisha came to the Law School, where she was awarded the AnBryce full-tuition scholarship in recognition of her tremendous success in the face of challenging social and economic circumstances. Her success exceeded all expectations. Calisha was: a member of the Law Review, where she was first a Staff Editor and then selected as a member of the Senior Board; a member of the Women's Leadership Network, an advisory council to the Law School; Chair of the Women of Color Collective, a student group that fosters a sense of community for women of color; and a fellow in the NYU Social Sector Leadership Diversity Fellowship, a graduate program designed to develop social sector leaders of color. Calisha also dedicated herself to volunteering with the Domestic Violence Advocacy Project and Legal Aid's Prisoners' Rights Project, where she later worked as a summer clerk.

After graduating from the Law School in 2015, Calisha joined the Federal Communications Commission as an attorney-advisor in the Policy Division of the Media Bureau. There, she presented to the Commission a notice of inquiry as to the state of diversity, competition, and innovation.

Calisha touched the lives of many with her warmth and overwhelming generosity. She will be lovingly remembered by friends and loved ones for her compassion, grace, strength, and intellect.
